

Winter Collection Run-Down by Jeerawan Duangnam

those winter nights

Inspired by the old Carco novels and characters from Cocteau, LaCroix is often spotted among velvet cabaret curtains and twirling ceiling lights on the tango floor. The image also suggests male dancers in the 30's dancehall on the rue de Lappe, dressed like anglophile dandies in stripes suit, coloured shirts, aviators with embossed velvet bombers. www.christianlacroix.com

british pride

Dunhill's designer Richard James fuses the atmosphere of London's Jermyn Street in the 70's with the best contemporary and luxurious materials. This St. James suit follows the classic English template but cleverly renders the jacket slightly longer and slimmer, while sculpting a narrower shoulder, higher top collar and armhole, finished with curved lapels and pockets. The suit is interpreted through the finest selection of traditional English fabrics. Velvet is a key seasonal trend, and the 70's flamboyance has a strong influence on the shirts and ties, with riots of colours along side medallions and paisleys patterns. The elegant full Windsor knot also makes a comeback. www.dunhill.com

“As an artist, I’m constantly looking for innovative ways to express myself creatively.” This quote from Enrique Iglesias is in line with the newest fragrance for men by Tommy Hilfiger. It is especially designed for the talented, charismatic and sexy. True Star Men (Pictured right, top) is a light fragrance of a soft-spiced wood combined with a cool refreshing scent of pink grapefruit blended with mysterious scents of black liquorice, saffron and sandalwood, making the fragrance tender, modern and perfect for all occasions.
